FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. First Capital and US Capital

5. First Capital Services, Inc. ("First Capital") was a Florida corporation located in Boca Raton, Florida, which purported to be in the business of commercial factoring. Commercial factoring is a financing method whereby a "factor" purchases account receivables at a discount from a "client" who is unable or unwilling to wait the thirty or more days that it may take to receive payment on a commercial invoice. In exchange for receiving partial payment on an invoice upfront, the client assigns to the factor the right to receive payment from the invoice debtor and the client also pays interest to the factor.

6. From approximately 1995 to 1997, First Capital, in an effort to raise funds for its commercial factoring operation, issued, offered and sold promissory notes, Senior Capital Notes, which promised to pay annual rates of interest of 9.25% and higher, to individual investors through a network of agents.

7. The Senior Capital Notes required a minimum investment of $25,000.00 and were for a term of 180 days but could be renewed.

8. First Capital marketed the Senior Capital Notes through agents who earned commissions of between 3% and 6%.

9. First Capital represented, by way of its agents, that investors' money would be used solely to purchase either government or insured corporate receivables.

10. In 1998, US Capital Funding, Inc. ("US Capital"), a Florida corporation located in Lake Worth, Florida, was formed. US Capital was engaged in the selling of promissory notes, US Capital Notes, to individual investors.

11. The US Capital Notes, similar to the Senior Capital Notes: (1) promised to pay annual rates of interest of 9.25% and higher; (2) were marketed through agents who earned commissions of between 3% and 6%; (3) represented by way of its agents that investors' money would be used solely to purchase either government or insured corporate receivables; (4) were for a term of 180 days but could be renewed; and (5) required a minimum investment was $25,000.00.

12. The US Capital Notes were issued, offered and sold by many of the same agents that sold the First Capital Notes.

13. The money invested in the US Capital Notes was used to fund First Capital.

14. In exchange for the investors' money invested in US Capital Notes, First Capital issued corporate notes to US Capital and paid a 10% commission to US Capital on the money it raised.

15. US Capital would seek the necessary funds from First Capital when a US Capital investor sought redemption of the notes.

16. In the summer of 1999, First Capital began defaulting on the corporate notes which it had issued to US Capital. US Capital in turn began having difficulty making the required interest payments to investors and fulfilling requests for redemption of the notes.

17. In October 1999, US Capital sued First Capital for defaulting on its corporate notes which First Capital had issued to US Capital.

18. In May 2000, First Capital filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in the United States Bankruptcy Court, Southern District of Florida, West Palm Beach.

19. The defaults by both First Capital and US Capital have resulted in significant losses to investors across the country, including New Jersey investors.

20. Neither the First Capital Notes nor the US Capital Notes were registered or exempt from securities registration with the Bureau.

21. Respondents Clark, LaSala, Lester and Farkas were among the New Jersey agents that sold these notes.

The brochures stated to investors, among other things, that: (1) "this investment is an ideal combination of handsome returns, rock solid safety and liquidity"; and (2) First Capital Services, Inc. will only finance receivables that are underwritten and insured by Continental Insurance Company."

56. In truth and in fact, Continental Insurance Company did not insure the individual investors' investment, but rather, only insured First Capital against loss.

57. The brochure also included description of First Capital's and US Capital's receivable debtor clients along with the promise that all funds would be held in segregated accounts to used only for the purchasing of receivables.

58. In their respective brochures, First Capital and US Capital predicted an annual percentage rate of return of 9.25% and stated that there was no sale charge for the notes. In truth and in fact, commissions of 5% to 6% were paid to agents including the Respondents.

59. The brochure did not: (1) explain the nature of the investment, its inherent risks or uncertainties; (2) failed to disclose whether the notes contained any potential downfalls, disadvantages or risks; and (3) failed to provide any financial disclosures.

60. Without disclosure to the investors, US Capital pooled all the investor money into a general corporate account which funded First Capital commercial factoring operation.
